Eurovision

Failure to vote for Israel in the Eurovision song contest is antisemitic according to Australia's Senate. Ozzie senators are apparently untroubled by Israel's blatant rigging of public and panel votes. But they are deeply alarmed at the fact that Australia's official judges dared to give the genocidal colony 'nul points'. So much so that they want an investigation into the non-scandal:

Eurovision 'colonial nonsense

Israel, of course, is not in Europe. Neither is Australia, which just goes to show what a colonial nonsense the whole thing is. Audiences are waking up to it, apparently, with viewer numbers collapsing and several core nations boycotting the whole thing.

US-Jewish journalist and commentator said the situation was 'beyond parody' and a prelude to obligatory Israel-support in future contests:

Beyond parody at this point. They already eroded their free speech laws to protect Israel.
Next: mandatory voting for Israel in song competitions.

Better than even odds that the UK gets there first, mind.
